RILEY AMOS IS AN AMERICAN MOUNTAIN BIKE RIDER AND MEMBER OF TREK FACTORY RACING.

Amos rose quickly through the junior ranks, winning nationals at 17, his first year in the junior category; that same year he also earned silver at the Pan American Championships. In 2020, Amos placed fourth at the UCI World Championships. With an equally meteoric rise through the U23 ranks, he was second at U23 Nove Mesto World Cup as the highest placing 19-year-old. In addition he also earned a bronze medal at the 2021 U.S. Pro Cup racing in the elite category. Amos also earned a silver medal at the 2019 World Championships as part of USA's team relay. Riley has since won 3 World Cup rounds.

Amos started riding bikes in second grade with Durango DEVO, a youth mountain bike club that included the likes of Howard Grotts, Christopher Belvins, and Quinn Simmons. His first coach was the legendary Todd Wells. In high school, Amos competed in the NICA high school mountain bike league and won four USAC national titles.

He says, “The fact that a lot of kids are inspired by me and saw how I came onto the scene and developed really quickly as a junior, I think that’s pretty special. I try to talk to a lot of kids and tell them my story, and just try and connect with a lot of youth, because I think the youth development in the US, pushing that is what’s [going to] make the US competitive in Europe again.”

Riley aspires to become Olympic and World Champion. Working with his coach, Jim Miller, he has created a plan to help him achieve these lofty goals while trusting the process and taking things one day at a time.
